Halloween is my favorite holiday. I love the candy, the fun, and costumes, and I love that for an entire month you can get away with anything you want to. It's the time of year when everyone is having a good time, and it's also a time when people put out candy with a smile on their face. Unfortunately for me, I've had this same attitude about Halloween for as long as I can remember. When I was younger, I'd just sit around until my mom told me to get dressed up and then we'd go out trick-or-treating. I hated it. I hated the fact that I wasn't allowed to wear my costume out until the entire thing was done, and I was pretty much always the last one in the neighborhood, and every single kid I went to was dressed up like Spider-Man or that little kid in Home Alone. If I was lucky enough to find a little kid who didn't look like a cartoon character, he'd always try to get a reaction out of me by calling me a "wannabe" or

What's New In?

Simple. Fast. Free. We have come up with a small and easy-to-use solution for managing the Clipboard. CopyQ allows you to create a single Clipboard entry, similar to the one you see on Windows. From there, you can export selected contents to text files, save the tab with links to any web pages you want to bring over and have a program friendly way to access it. Better than the others. It is simple to configure and use. New features are added regularly and the developers are good about listening to customers. .net-compatible, but not.net only. Many of the features are available on Windows if you use some vbscript or an add-on. Let me start by saying that I have used various clipboard managers over the years and I am not "anti" any of them, but I have only found one that does things just right. CopyQ is one of them. First of all, CopyQ is lightweight (approximately 30Mb), fast and intuitive. It's also one of the most feature-rich clipboard managers you will find. It even has the basics, such as a right-click paste command to transfer selected text (actually, it has a menu option to do this), which is handy. There are a couple of things that are not very intuitive. For example, you have to configure CopyQ to use file/clipboard at some point of the installation. File/clipboard is the way Windows normally uses the clipboard, but it can sometimes work against your needs. If you want to use that method, you have to run the configuration at some point and select it. Clipboard services can be used if you want to copy web pages, pictures or anything else. The help file shows how to use this, but there are no examples of how to use it. The CopyQ download page shows a "Demo" version, but it is just a simple demonstration and does not include all the features of the real version. (I have downloaded the real version and it does not have this limitation.) It's not a big deal, but it's worth mentioning. The features list is impressive. You can copy and paste web pages or notes with data, just like in Microsoft Word. You can also export tabs to file, or import them later. Add web images to a page and display them with full screen mode (you can control which images to display). There are some limitations, such as the fact that you can't select files. You can only paste what is currently on the clipboard. If you need to select a file, you can still use the "add file" option, but you have to manually paste the file. CopyQ can also search the Clipboard for any specific file. There is an option to store the Clipboard in the background (depending on the settings). If
