(Applicant's Abstract) This proposal describes an interdisciplinary approach to the study of the basic sciences underlying various aspects of alcohol abuse and alcoholism. The approach is to use a multidisciplinary approach, combined with extensive genetic linkage data, to further explore the molecular genetic causes of alcoholism. Five specific projects will be performed: 1) to assess the relationships between opiate receptor genes and alcoholism and opioid consumption; 2) to analyze plasma proteins and other candidate genes for association with alcoholism and/or alcohol abuse; 3) to determine whether the C4 allele of HLA is associated with alcoholism in a Caucasian population; 4) to assess the relationship of CYP2E1 genotype to alcohol metabolism and alcohol-related problems; and 5) to examine the inheritance of ADH2 alleles in a large family in which the mode of inheritance is consistent with the high prevalence of ADH2*1 in Asian populations. Several additional projects are also described. These projects will be performed in collaboration with research groups in the Department of Biology, the Department of Psychiatry, the Department of Medical Genetics, the Department of Pharmacology, the Department of Psychiatry, the Department of Psychology, and the Division of Molecular Biology and Genetics.
